Deiner Mutter Seele peitscht die Haie vor dir her.

 PAUL CELAN

years in the gray
no speck of dark
to pin a word to

I staggered out of that death-in-life
still waiting to exist

the scar on my forehead snaking a blank river landscapes petrified

the single slab of wood I scrape against the grain of this satori

April 12, 2003

The Shroud in the Drawing Room

he glimpses Death at the harpsichord she strikes the keys with flinty fingers arpeggios of silence ring in her ears weave the rigid cobweb round her head the cruelest month a time against forgetting the green leaves fall without having lived down by the city wall it's business as usual they're carving horseflesh for their dinner don't tell the old ladies he's under there Mr Abattoria at the term of his hibernation not long before he'll lift the yellowed sheet to take his first uncertain steps into oblivion

April 14, 2003

City of Ghosts

the parapet at flood tide knows how well my shadow resists the temptation to be carried off with the rest of the debris searching for her dead lover a woman catches sight of a snail scarred by foam as it blackens and mistakes it for a foetus when I look around for a reason I look right at you she says but the sun is far behind her too far for me to see her face

I do not know my name it was taken from me years ago the first time I crossed this bridge into the city of ghosts

Bœuf Lunaire

though bugs nest in his ears Mr Abattoria still hears the thud of the butcher's boot kicking at the planks of the shed letting air into the miasma before the swarm settles a lightbulb crackles and goes out the carcass hangs from slaughter a butterfly of bone and blood flayed above the killing floor a gull sinks with the tide the horizon grows fainter a moonstruck ox lies in a field of grass dreaming the false dream of the life to come

A Bedside Archaeology

the small tape recorder on the night table he'd forgotten it was there held it in his hands again wiped away the dust pressed the button
and excavated his voice from seven years ago the resonating fossil of a stranger

the dust mite nibbling the sheet was destined to become the ancestor to a new race of dinosaurs that would have ruled the earth a hundred million years from now when the human race is long extinct
but reaching for his buried past Mr Abattoria rolled over and crushed it in the bed

Field Notes

he found an egg of stone not a fossil but so ancient it must have stood for centuries he turned it under the lamp listened for the muffled plea of a voice from within shook it then held it to his ear but heard only a roaring silence he noted the faint inscription scratched into the flint of the shell characters he could not decipher the sun sank behind the elms warmed it on the kitchen sill as some cracks appeared fractured roads on a map leading nowhere

a reptilian flower bloomed a hand hatched free the morning after

on the third day two scaled petals and some fingernail parings were all that remained of the egg he sealed them in a plastic bag with the notes he had made the next time Mr Abattoria discovers something interesting under the bed he won't let it out of his sight

June 7, 2003

Mutoscope

crowds through drenched streets I didn't know a single face two nights dancing and two more without a bite to eat it was not what I'd planned

I wanted to say something about persistence of vision of how the illusion it creates distorts all reason but he cornered me before I could begin he whispered I should have murdered you in the park because that's where you killed my brother though I'd have preferred a more nimble executioner for him nothing remained to be said I stared through the viewer at that unexpected face and glimpsed the ghost of a gulag between the flipping cards it rained hard for days I was getting up late not minding that someone with fists made of stone kept pounding at the door

Exploded View

Eden will never be more than a dune latchkey to the blind kingdom viewed from our common grave it hovers in false memory refracts the dull glister of anomalous worlds

Babel's tower sinks and a silence overtakes us seeding the ground with its shambles coughing up oblivion before it speaks

Blue Noise

this desert is an inch long I can't cross it until I've counted each grain of sand time slags into mud

never fade from memory

the horizon gets closer pages jaded or blank blasted from shale cliffs

I stumble past the last of them lost till a blue noise lures me to the bed of my mother's death and here I lie wondering if I can ever rise again

✿ THE SCHOOL OF DARKNESS

Cold Image

a river flows under the transom those specks when you close your eyes pulse and flutter in the old books blur the words and sing off-key pages foxed with the leopard's pelt

I stayed up hours to hear them they weren't worth a skeleton key the poem makes music and the dead die again to return in dreams as I scratch for what flakes off

March 15, 2004

Riding the Tin Gorilla

it steps out from behind the mirror politely asks you to climb onto its back then you're off at a scampering gallop riding the tin gorilla past hope and fear past the lonely place where punishment peels the glove from its frozen fingers these shattered bricks cradle the spume of an aching sky through dreamless nights a surrender to false horizons to gigantic arches of mud and mist as the tin gorilla gallops past the clatter of its spiked fur raises a terrible din and as you cling to its shoulders you shut your eyes praying this is not the endless nightmare of the life after death but the tin gorilla gallops on

The Locusts

the beetle sleeps with the stone we have put on this living mask to see a stone scuttle away bricks from the sagging wall the pox on these rubbings smudged by desperate fingers we return here for no reason our shoes sink again into the same brittle carnage these seventeen years too many we loved have put on the mask of exile

the ashen swarm descends their death rattle has shaken the woods for days

Dispossession

viewed from the bridge at night these blind forms drift and slither
broken by the tide where the moon lies slivered between the rocks this is the hour of expectation the glossary of pure desire where every name of the woman that will never come is listed alphabetically in the clouds we no longer watch the skies though the skirt of heaven rises and our backs are to the parapet leave us this compass of dominion this shrieking space of horror

May 29, 2004

The Madness

the skin of the tent cribbled like the lantern in a dream vistas of sky and earth pebbled by the calfskin blanched of color and crime we followed close behind taken by the madness trying hard to forget the paintings in the grass the festered lip of mimosa the mound where we'd buried the sacred fish alive those crows sketched crudely on the clouds for weeping women

more food than these people see in weeks he mumbled as we stepped gingerly over the freshest of the tombs where the cobra slept

The Spiral Jetty

salt crusted black basalt a sigh of relief crossed the lake we knew we'd died long enough to hear the boiling in those rocks something ill-conceived was taking shape along the strand a wish a distant meditation on all our misbegotten hopes when the spiral uncoiled breasting a roar that didn't sound anything like water the jetty crumbled under us the jetty moved out to sea seeking the high desert it drowned in a mirror image of gently undulating ground

The Transposed Heads

Mr Abattoria is dreaming of the mystery of the transposed heads people he has known for years are no longer as he remembers them his childhood friend his dead parents the women he once pursued have all made common cause with their new heads' evil personalities this degree of treachery has its own richness because though the transposed heads seem strange they appear disquietingly familiar from the dune Mr Abattoria has just enough time to consider the nights of confusion that lie ahead if he fails to wake or is suddenly struck down he can't see the answer under his eyes it lies like a log along this ashen shore melts into a mist as it dismantles the pyramids of the far horizon

Of Remedies

for the better preservation of your health put up the chicken in angularity no clysters make nor any purge of aloe bind shut the bill and let the chicken hang for days to tenderize its flesh

Sir Thomas Browne maintained that in the time of Albertus Magnus they made use of cauteries in divers places fomentations distillations and other remedies for the great coldness of hawks the chicken was gorged on vinegar and fed the hawks with boiled bats to restore flesh and feather for the sport this against consumption with further decoctions to add unto your knowledge life stops when the power goes down at least the toilets continue to function Paul Valéry wrote that when he was young people read for hours by the light of a candle with no harm done to their eyes

Desire

even when I imagine you you are no phantom
I feel your image
breathe in my arms

smell the scent of you under your clothes
sniff the essence of your secret flesh

I've closed my eyes to the ruins around me
and will never be able to open them again

no ship can sound
the depth of the ocean
this night must cross for me to lie beside you

September 7, 2004

Moss

the light in the park was beautiful this morning the way it fell on the moss cold can't kill it or keep the moss from dreaming of a new country to bury the rock the wall

the stump of tree
becomes a sinking stool

moss cuts a path
ribbed with illusion to hold back the night

drowns extinction in the heart of the labyrinth with a green sleep

Intimate Herrings

the spinach on the grill he didn't want to eat it refused point blank to sink the tip of a tusk in this was when he noticed the waiter had dwindled the man was slowly sinking legs puddling out of trousers

Mr Abattoria hadn't been in the city for long when he began to hear rumors of the intimate herrings they don't resemble fish the night clerk advised him adding that the management urged residents to avoid the stairs spring being slow to come love was not in bloom but the promise of love lingered in expectation of the herrings

Mr Abattoria combed his hair and plucked his eyebrows waiting for an intimate herring to appear it could assume any form that much he knew from the lady who changed the bed its properties were self-refuting yet no one had witnessed a metamorphosis what made these herrings intimate was their overwhelming desire for close contact with the human body thus they were impossible to console prowling the marina Mr Abattoria wondered how dangerous it would be to discover himself in the presence of an intimate herring the harbor patrol dragged the bay for bodies but dredged up only a few small foreign coins a suitcase and a tub

an engine hummed in the alley it was still winter and not a mosquito to be seen as a cloud dimmed the moon intimate herrings were the blind seekers

the dream flesh warmed
the nightmare

Pier

the pier over dry land
stopped just at the water they were tossing the severed heads in from there

faces floated till it filled their mouths
each sank bubbling
its bloody wraith

descended with the sun drowned water in shadows that fell with the trees when will they come again earth roughs its nail into what was memory

the crows fly away

The Accusation

you know those little sausages Pasquale was lying on his back in front of the palazzo I crouched there feeding them to him one by one

I didn't want this to go on any longer without absolute proof of his accusation my arms were getting tired the one I had slipped under Pasquale's head was numb they're filling my coffin with potatoes

something else they bury in the family plot give me another one of those little sausages by then Pasquale had opened his eyes raising his finger and shaking it at me lips puffed as if to blow away the bubble floating just above his expressionless face night had fallen and neither one of us noticed the street lamps gave off no light the water from this morning's rain glimmered reflecting the blue shore of the Mediterranean

His Posthumous Existence

here in what he hopes is merely the first of his posthumous lives he hides under a smothering branch books float in an unforgiving ocean he opens one as they bob by clings to a page before drowning this is what it means to have passed to the blind side of the mirror the hours of waiting laid out on drab linen and soiled sheets that voice at the foot of the stairs if it could ever speak it would say a man lies there conjuring dissolution a rusted relic to be exhumed and misinterpreted by the archaeologist nothing to do with what life was everything with what may come after a rest that cannot rest for moving

The Pageless Brain

saved from certain death I was hauled into their time with no memory of the there I came from birth to the quark of transmutation a spent wing swaddled in the cumuli fortunes of destiny and despair buried neither a moment in eternity nor the eternity in a moment there was only an itch crawling from vein to brain gray matter tumbling forward its satori long forsaken the paled air after a vanishing

Tusk and Talon

the torment of a courtyard gate screeching in the heart of China only empty rooms here the promise of amnesia but nothing to pay for forgetting the profane god we are forced to live with now a blade cradles some stars clouds unlace the night the smoke of doom curls across the cobbles dividing this wilderness from the sleep to come

May 24, 2005

The Legacy

mindful of the proverb he that smiteth the spider shall inherit the web Mr Abattoria probes for loose stones in the parapet

he combs the soil
for worm castings
the pillow is no nearer when he tries to sleep his head grows smaller memory has become a guest house for ghosts time to lay down the knife let the black swarm settle never a breath of wind but the sand shifts and there are some new dunes each night billions of grains cascading as the spider lies on its back beside him

Primavera

purple tongues of larkspur shudder from the breeze of Apollonia Portinari's passing the broad dome of the sky huddled behind drowsing clouds pretends to be inconspicuous not far from here the forest where mammals one never sees are storing their acorns the seed cowers by the parent plant the jewel from a cast off ring lies in grass waiting to blossom bark of a beech tree so smooth it scarcely wrinkles the shadow of Apollonia Portinari's passing

Without Title

what I can imagine now the field has narrowed the stump of oak couched in a pond of moss

no way to move beyond it the old skies have slipped away a moon blows brittle leaves against the cabin window dew in morning light is the sweat of fear

the glottal sob of drowning moths

my fingers cold even in summer the Thief lies under a low ceiling his face hidden

Wisdom

failed scholar Zheng Xuan fell asleep beneath a tree an old man cut open his chest and removed the heart

always an old man wields the knife in the dream he fills the cavity with ink then stitches it shut

this marked the beginning of Zheng Xuan's wisdom but The Book of Xun Zi says all wisdom resides with the heart ink where the heart was takes a lifetime to dry put not your trust in wisdom or in dreams

July 5, 2005

Time and Fate

we try to sleep but our heads turn to rocks on the pillows insomnia has no end when centuries come to mean nothing the tenth planet housed in the sky has been there since the time no one remembers a wake of fallen armies shudders long after blood loses warmth and plants its scent in the grass

the heart still beats for the blue cage of night it hopes to touch again

Far from This Place

the small comet sizzled in its mound of tide soaked sand west of the river they were bending over blue drops of rain when you awakened naked in the apple's womb a specter caught the whisper of chalk on slate dust where the last idols drifted the final stroke of the lesson that closed the school of darkness the order of things had changed without warning ash from embers of the night before was swept away leaving a smooth pebbled floor a leveled path for the barefoot

August 6, 2005

Sorgues

the head wound in the Great War came close to blinding him it was then Braque realized he no longer believed in anything an object had no life of its own now it existed for him only in rapport with other objects that glowed beneath a leprous light

Braque burned the regimental colors surrendered in the house at Sorgues to a harmony that brought peace and made all things possible the plow stilled by the sun the sauceboat and the asparagus the metronome's reflection in the muted burl of the piano

In Aspic

he lies immobile
jellied in aspic
remembering the vision of Apollonia Portinari
six poems ago

the desire that pricks at her hips darkens the anemone
breeding endless night
into its spines

half his life Abattoria has told himself a sea change will come he sleeps engarnished warm and waiting

The Dog-Headed God

never the moon of poets this satellite bearded with craters and parched untranquil seas passes behind stilled clouds its eyes bleared by smoke those burning tears

could flood a city
only dull sand smothered by memories and regrets

I stood with my dead mother at the top of the stairs peering through the window at a spotted silver coin crutched up by branches

Dark Crawling

dark crawling begins an escape from bad dreams and an even worse reality animal warmth remains but nothing more

just to slip off
all that is needed
you feel the air
tingling the hairs
on your body

the poem hangs in midair the exercise you take up at night without wanting to new routine of an old age you'll never learn to live with a coldness under your fingers it's marble from a country that you will never see from a torment

yet to be named drunk or sober you are committed to the passionless exploration of what lies beyond the pillow and the night sweat

a swelling mud turns to crust beneath you
the rumpitous monster grins but tells nothing of what it knows

still a long space to crawl across this darkness a light to imagine
at the very end
that won't be there

A Scumbling

what he already knows Apollonia is so beautiful even the dead dream of her alive but sleepless Abattoria fears the salted paddock that will horse him round for good he sees a forecastle tilt

and paddles toward it

sniffs the scent of fog where fish turn up their bellies to pale the silvered night the owl's blind burden leaves him speechless as he drifts toward his prey something gray bloats the air between him and the place where he hopes to find her a sudden modification what painters call a scumbling traps him in its convexity just as he's getting close the wilderness emptied of him stretches far so far away

How It Happens

a few words dressed in black or an image that comes on without form or warning molecules squirm there nameless protozoa

swim into existence

a scent of something raw pricks at your nostrils takes on its own breath swells and capitulates with the room you lie in and finds you waiting

staining nothingness
in the blood and color of a new world

October 10, 2005

White Domes

the hill where the houses stood had long been leveled and the street slept under clumps of yellow weed not a single brick or window left to frame or smother echoes of the ghosts who still resided here one floated through high grass to post a letter to her dead lover lips of a phantom mailbox yawned an elm is the lone survivor I used to park my car there now there's nothing to shade just those white domes the palely blistered light of noon with no beginning no end

Revelation

and the lobster in the bib spake unto Abattoria saying put not forth thyself to meddle with the dainties that are set before thee for they are deceitful he that hath no governance over his own plate is like a fool who uttereth all his mind into a thimble go to the Great Fish thou glutton consider its ways and be wise when Abattoria heard these words he arose and was full of wonder and it came to pass that he went out from the lobster and set himself to dwell in the midst of the sea

Ink on Silk

they unrolled the hanging scroll six hundred years out of China we saw the woodcutter crouch strain to fade into the cloth the dulled blade motionless the banyans stood frozen against the stiffest of winds in the webbed window behind us roof slates curled then melted domes sank into the foundations of temples whose walls collapsed under them centuries ago no one could say how those domes had waited so long to die
